PROVINCIAL ARCHIVES OF ALBERTA

GOVERNMENT RECORDS AND THEIR USE

The Provincial Archives of Alberta is the official repository for those non-current records of the Alberta Government which have historic value. At present over 600 collections encompassing over 4,600 linear meters of records are available for research in the Archives Reference Room.

As the administration of the Province has affected the lives of Albertans in many ways since 1905, so the Government records disclose information on all aspects of Alberta's history and development. Use of these records is facilitated in the Reference Room by the central card index as well as inventories to many of the major collections. However, because the indexes and inventories cannot possibly disclose all the data in the collections (seldom is there information below the file level), it is important that the researcher have in mind what form of involvement the Government might have had with his subject of research.

The Government Records collections are retained according to the department, board or agency which either created or had custody of them. Therefore, knowledge of how each section of the Government would have related to the research topic is essential. In most cases, several sections whold have been involved to at least some degree. A case in point is local history. Should the researcher wish to investigate in depth the history of a particular town, he would want information on the social, legal, economic, corporate, cultural, educational, geographic, administrative and political developments in this community. He should, therefore, consult, among others, the relevant records from the departments of Social Development, Labour, the Attorney General, Industry and Tourism, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Culture, Education, Transportation, Energy, Municipal Affairs, the Executive Council and the Premier's Office under their headings in the card index.

As the Province has evolved over the years, the Government structure has been subject to continual reorganization. Departments, branches, boards and agencies were established to administer particular Government programs and activities only to be discontinued once their usefulness was served, renamed or amalgamated within other departments. The existing archival records of these defunct or dissolved sections of the Government were then either transferred to other related sections or else deposited in the Provincial Archives under the name of the originating section. It is important, therefore, for the researcher to become familiar with the structure of the Government during the period of his or her research topic to determine just what departments, branches, boards or agencies were in existence at that time, their divisions, what their functions were and what became of them. A check in the Canadian Almanac will accomplish this, while more detailed analysis can be undertaken in the Archives' Departmental Histories guide and in K. L. Powell's A History of Name Changes of Alberta Government Departments and Agencies, 1905-73 which are located in the Reference Room.

Once it is determined what sections and sectional divisions of the Government whould have created records relating to the research topic, the researcher should check their listings, and those of their successors or parent departments, in the central card index. If it appears that particular collections might contain pertinent information, the corresponding inventories, arranged in order of reference number in green binders, should then be consulted. Further information may also be contained in the accession or PRC file on the collection. The items within the collections may then be requested from the reference archivist who is always available for consultation.

As with other provinces, the documentary record of the Alberta Government is by no means complete. Prior to 1966 there was no legislation governing the transfer of records to the Archives, and many valuable documents were inadvertently destroyed. Today, however, there is a Public Records Committee, of which the Provincial Archivist is Secretary, which approves disposition of non-current records, determining which may be destroyed and what must be retained in the Archives. As a result, over 400 linear meters of Government Records are deposited in the Archives each year. Certain of the larger collections are microfilmed on an ongoing basis to preserve fragile originals, to save space and to facilitate eventual dissemination to other repositories.

The major Government Records collections held in the Provincial Archives are listed on the following pages. Please keep in mind the fact that some of these have not yet been properly inventoried or indexed. Specific data in them might, therefore, be difficult to locate. Also, the Archives houses a number of collections which are to be restricted from public access for certain periods of time.
